HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

Your Companion for the Journey

This study guide is designed to walk alongside each chapter of "The Push You Needed" — whether you are reading alone, as part of the Scripture Studio Book Society, or in a small group. Each chapter page includes a key quote, a brief thematic overview, three discussion questions, and a notes field you can fill in and save digitally.

> "The push was never punishment. It was preparation."
> — Dr. Richard G. Clark, The Push You Needed

01 Read the chapter in your book first, then return to this guide.

02 Read the Key Quote and let it sit for a moment before moving on.

03 Work through each of the three discussion questions honestly.

04 Use the Notes field for anything God places on your heart.

05 If you are in a group, bring your written answers to the conversation.

06 Complete the Commitment Page at the end before your next session.

The Valley Year

When you lose everything in one season

> "Grief does not disqualify you. Sometimes it is the very thing that qualifies you for what is next."

This chapter invites you into the year that nearly broke Dr. Clark — and asks you to name your own. What is the season you have been afraid to revisit? What did it cost you, and what did it quietly give you that you have not yet acknowledged?

1 What year or season in your life has felt most like a valley? What made it feel that way?

2 What did you lose in that season — tangibly or spiritually? What, if anything, did you gain?

3 How does it change your understanding of that time to consider that God was present in it?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

When God Shoves

The difference between a nudge and a push

> "A nudge is gentle. A shove means God has already been gentle and you weren't moving."

Dr. Clark draws a clear line between invitation and urgency. This chapter explores the moments when God stops whispering and starts moving you by force — not out of frustration, but out of love for what you are about to become.

1 Has God ever "shoved" you into something you were not ready for? Describe what that felt like.

2 What is the difference between resistance born of fear and resistance that is actually wisdom?

3 What area of your life right now feels like God may be losing patience with your hesitation?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

Rejection is Redirection

Based on 1 Samuel 16:1

> "What looked like rejection from man was a rerouting from God. He needed you somewhere else."

Using David's anointing as the backdrop, this chapter reframes every door that has ever closed on you. The rejection you experienced was not the end of the story — it was a plot device moving you toward the right room.

1 Describe a rejection or closed door that, in hindsight, redirected you somewhere better.

2 Where are you still grieving a no that God may have already replaced with a better yes?

3 How does the story of David change the way you see being overlooked or passed over?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

The Waiting Room

What to do when you know, but it is not time yet

> "The waiting room is not wasted time. It is the room where God is building what you are not ready to hold yet."

Between the promise and the fulfillment is a space most people cannot stand — the wait. This chapter is written for the person who knows what they are called to, but cannot yet see when or how. The waiting room is not empty. It is full of preparation.

1 What promise or calling are you currently in the waiting room for?

2 How have you been using — or wasting — the waiting season you are in right now?

3 What character trait or capacity do you think God may still be building in you before the door opens?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

The Weight of the Mantle

What no one tells you about purpose

> "Purpose is not a gift you unwrap. It is a weight you learn to carry. And carrying it changes you."

The romanticized version of purpose leaves out the cost. This chapter is honest about what walking in your calling will demand — and why most people quit right before the breakthrough. The mantle is heavy. But it was made for you.

1 What cost of your calling have you not fully accepted yet?

2 Where are you tempted to put down the mantle when things get hard?

3 Who in your life has modeled what it looks like to carry purpose without being crushed by it?

Speaking to Dead Things

Faith that resurrects what looks finished

> "What looks dead from where you are standing may just be sleeping from where God is standing."

Ezekiel's valley of dry bones sits at the center of this chapter. Dr. Clark asks a bold question: what in your life have you already buried that God may want to raise? Dreams, relationships, ministries, callings — the question is whether you are willing to speak to them again.

1 What dream, relationship, or calling have you declared dead that may not actually be finished?

2 What would it take for you to speak life over something you have given up on?

3 Where has fear of disappointment kept you from believing God could resurrect something?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

The People God Sends

Community is not optional in a season of assignment

> "You were not designed to carry the push alone. God assigns people to seasons, not just purposes."

This chapter focuses on the role of community in a season of assignment. Who God sends into your life during a push is not accidental. Some people are mirrors. Some are fuel. Some are weight. Learning to tell the difference is a survival skill.

1 Who has God placed in your life specifically for this season? How do you know?

2 Is there someone in your circle who is adding weight rather than fuel? How are you handling that?

3 What kind of community member are you to the people in your own circle right now?

NOTES & PERSONAL REFLECTION

After the Push

What to do when you arrive

> "When you finally land where God was pushing you, the temptation is to stop. But landing is not the destination — it is the new starting line."

The final chapter addresses what happens after the push works — when you arrive somewhere new, something has been restored, or a season has shifted. Arrival is not the end. It is the beginning of stewardship. What you do with where God brought you determines everything about what comes next.

1 What arrival in your life are you most grateful for — and what have you done with it?

2 Where are you tempted to settle in a place God intended as a launching pad?

3 What is the one thing God is calling you to do now that you have received this push?
